

LOW PROFILE RIDGE VENT

Size: The Mueller low-profile floating ridge vent is a 10 foot unit, available in over 30 designer colors.

Design: Aerodynamic, low-profile design enhances the appearance and performance of architectural roof systems. The unit moves towards the ridge on floating roofs. Our low-profile vents are made to match the roof slope and color to maintain a low-profile appearance while ventilating areas under the roof.

Construction: A Mueller low-profile vent is factory assembled for the customer. It is produced from 26-gauge, grade 50 steel (50,000 min KSI yield point) for a durable, long life while exposed to the elements.

Finish: Our ridge vents feature durable steel construction and a top-quality paint coating, complementing every Mueller roof type and paint finish. Mueller offers more than 30 designer colors to choose from to get the look you desire.

Benefits of Ventilation: One of the most overlooked components of design and installation of architectural roofing systems is ventilation. A properly engineered ventilation system using ridge vents, in conjunction with an under soffit intake or wall louver, will provide air movement through the roofing system to remove air. Convection removes summer heat, which reduces cooling bills and extends the life of the roofing system. In winter, proper ventilation will assist in the control of condensation that can lead to problems such as rust and insulation degradation.
